

Bobby Mairone

Art is something that I didn't know I could do until I started doing it. I grew up in South Jersey, and I had only really been exposed to art in my grade school art classes. I never thought about studying art in college until my junior year of high school when I took a class about video game development and design. We were making basic pixel art, but this was my first experience with Photoshop. The instructors said I had a knack for it. This is what inspired me to study Digital Arts at the University of Tampa. Ultimately, my personal goal is to create something better than the last thing I created.
