New and increased gifts have helped lead the way for Forward Fund '74. General Chairman Paul E. LeBlanc announced that $64,163 in new money has already been reported during the Community Division portion of the Forward Fund '74 drive.

"We are running well ahead of last year," LeBlanc told volunteers, "thanks to these new gifts, and we expect to exceed the Community Division's goal of $475,000 very shortly." Gifts and pledges of $422,274 have already been reported - or 89% of that goal. Separate drives for parents and alumni will be conducted this fall, bringing the total Forward Fund '74 goal to a record $550,000. All donors making gifts by June 30 will be listed in the Honor Roll list appearing in the August Annual Report issue of the Muezzin. Gifts should be sent to the Development Office.

The second annual Minaret Society Dinner, held in Fletcher Lounge on May 24, was a fine mixture of haut cuisine, high seriousness, mellow conversation, music and comedy

Following the cocktail hour and dinner, special awards and presentations were made by President B. D. Owens and current chairman Mr. Sam Davis. The featured entertainer for the evening was "master of mirth" Dick Capri; music was by the Jack Golly Trio. The Minaret Society, which identifies with UT's 13 silver minarets, is a prestigious group of men and women whose aim is to strengthen the University through financial support. Founded just two years ago, The Minaret Society now numbers 136 members who have contributed just over $1,000,000 to the University.

The words "SEE RED" are popping up in the bay area on everything from billboards to automobile bumpers. The message is a reminder that the most consistently successful collegiate football team in Florida is our own Big Red Spartans.

The best way to SEE RED this fall is by ordering season tickets as early as possible at the reduced price of only $33 for six games.

To reserve seats of your choice, call the new University Ticket Office, located at North Blvd, and North "B" Street, at 257-6401. They will be glad to help you select the seats you prefer. In addition, you can obtain from the ticket office your share of SEE RED bumper stickers.

Call today and SEE RED this fall. A tough schedule and a veteran team assures you of Saturday evenings filled with exciting football

A new private prep school stressing the concept of self-acceleration and development will open with a ninth grade class this fall on or near UT. The Tampa Preparatory School is being founded by Tampa area educators and businessmen in cooperation with UT. Additional grades will be added as the school grows and progresses. UT graduate students in education and also interning seniors may be utilized in the program.

The Nabisco Foundation gave $3,500 for library books for the MBA program.

milestones: retiring...

dr. iesse I. keene

After 38 years at UT, having shared his knowledge with literally hundreds of students, Dr. Jesse Keene is retiring. His years as professor of history and political science have been as rewarding as they have been numerous

Dr. Keene has seen the University through many dramatic changes He was here through WWII, the Korean War and a depression; and he remembers when the school consisted of one main building heated with wood fires.

A former football, basketball, baseball and track star with Vanderbilt, Professor Keene's proud and energetic bearing belie his 70 years — UT's mandatory

dr. alvan r. mc fadven

A veteran professor of English at UT for 22 years, Dr. McFadyen is leaving the University with several coveted honors.

This past year he was named Outstanding Faculty Member of the Year with over five years' service, by the UT National Alumni Association. At the '74 Honors Convocation, he was also named Outstanding Faculty Member of the Year. So he departs UT with many memories, and leaves behind him the love for literature he has passed on to many students.

An interesting side-note: Dr. McFadyen and Dr. Keene were graduate school classmates at the University of Florida, back in "the good old days." Now they share yet another phase of their lives and careers.

ut women: the educators

Although this feature's title should be as unnecessary as the title "UT men...," the fact remains that our society is still in the self-conscious process of discovering the particular contributions of women. whether in education or any other professional field. This article, and the ones that follow on the inside page, are part of this discovery process.

A description of Anniece Ross, assistant professor of English, would probably include the terms "intellectual," intense," and "innovative."

Her current projects, in addition to conscientious attention to her teaching, include (1) the completion of a sophisticated doctoral dissertation on the similarity between science and literature in their methods of discovery and verification of information; (2) a recent presentation of a paper on Ruskin at a Conference on children and how to best educate them. Scorning any sex role biases, Dr. Lake applauds the trend for young men to become elementary school teachers — a career traditionally pursued by women — although she emphatically holds that a child-oriented personality is what counts, not one's sex.

Regarding departmental administration, Dr. Lake claims to be a pragmatist. She is content to contribute ideas, letting the men implement them, for (as she points out) it is still true that statements and actions by men carry more weight in our society.

Hers is a well-rounded and "liberated" life. "Altogether," she says, "I do a good many things" from working on a book of teaching techniques, to going on 40-day escapades in Europe or Africa, or taking in a Metropolitan opera.

Ms. Anniece Ross

Dr. Mary Louise Lake

Victorian Counter-Culture attended by scholars from all over the world; and (3) carrying out of duties as a member of the Faculty Committee — the only elected committee at UT.

Although Anniece does not describe herself as a women's libber, she is nevertheless aware that "when a woman does well, other women are glad for her success, for it has a bearing on their own future." Anniece has managed to avoid the defensiveness of many women professionals: "I don't regard myself as a woman professor, but just as a professor and assume everyone else does too. It doesn't seem to be a consideration in the classroom or among my colleagues - being a woman."

However, Ms. Ross asserts quietly but definitely that being female "does not affect the quality of my mind, nor does it keep a woman from reaching the forefront of her profession."

"I like being a woman; we have a contribution to make; I'm not sure yet how to define it, but it won't involve striving to be just like men." So says Dr. Mary Louise Lake, UT's only woman full professor Lake doesn't waste time talking about contributions she's too busy making them.

Much of Dr. Lake's time is spent in the classroom, passing on her distinctly humanistic concern for young

Dr. Constance Rynd Dr. Constance Rynder, assistant professor of history, regards her professional life as a teacher and scholar gratifyingly compatible with the UT community "I am first and foremost a teacher," she says, "and at a small private college, teaching is the primary

Dr. Rynder takes this commitment seriously. She finds that most of her waking hours are spent in professional activities ("I like it that way").

In addition to teaching and preparation, Constance advises two honorary societies: Phi Alpha Theta (a history honorary), and the Society of Athena. The latter is a new freshman women's scholastic honorary society. which Dr. Rynder has been instrumental in founding ("there has long been a desperate need for such a group"). When she's not buried in books and papers, Constance can be found in the Rathskeller, which she considers the ideal place to develop meaningful student-faculty relationships — "one of UT's selling points because of its size."

Her views on being a woman professional: "When I entered graduate school, women were still considered had risks: this made it twice as hard but also made the 'quest' more challenging"; "but I feel totally accepted at UT by male colleagues as a professional equal and have felt no discrimination whatsoever.

the passing of a president

1931: Dr. Frederick H. Spaulding opens the door to a new college and a new life.

"Fight, fight, against the dying of the light" are words from a poem on death by lyricist Dylan Thomas. They seem appropriate to a memorial comment on the death of the University of Tampa's founder and first president, Dr. Frederick Spaulding.

Dr. Spaulding fought the "dying of the light" by spending his 82 years in dynamic and meaningful activity - mostly serving causes of higher education The University community will best remember Dr Spaulding as the man whose educational vision, coupled with pragmatic energy and the courage to take risks for high stakes, led to the birth and survival of this University

During Dr. Spaulding's six years as UT president (1931-37), he saw it through the birth traumas of financial and other hazards during Depression years. He was rewarded by being able to witness the enrollment grow from 50 in 1931 to 465 in 1936.

All the struggles, poignant moments, the elation and the despair involved in founding the University are recorded in Dr. Spaulding's book on his years as president, A UNIVERSITY IS BORN, which will be published late 1973: A past president and change.

An historic moment in honor of an historic building took place on April 29. In a grand ceremony, UT's Plant Hall, originally the Tampa Bay Hotel, was dedicated as a National Historic Site on the Florida Bicentennial Trail. Mayor R. L. Cheney is shown here addressing the gathering as UT President B. D. Owens, Dr. Johnnie Ruth Clarke (member of the Bicentennial Commission), and other participants look on. UT professor Dr. James Covington reviewed the past and significance of the hotel; testimonial items including a permanent marker and a Bicentennial flag were exchanged.

...the administrators

Whether she's handing out advice, coffee, aspirin or bail, Marisol Johns' career as Dean of Student Development is concern for UT students.

During Dean Johns' five-year stint at UT, she has weathered significant liberalizing changes in student attitudes, rights and behavior. Her attitude is a healthy one of trust: "Young people will assume responsibility if given the opportunity, but not if authority is imposed externally."

This belief has much to do with Marisol's rapport with the many students who call on her for help literally night and day. Midnight phone calls may draw her to hospitals, unfamiliar addresses or even the city jail. Dean Johns finds, however, that the feedback and rewards are worth the investments.

Her experiences as a woman professional have been positive: "I'm one of the lucky ones. I have never felt discrimination — as a concert pianist, a language teacher, a grad student, a counselor, or here at UT."

Dean Marisol Johns

Mrs. Joyce Plumley

Joyce Plumley is a versatile and efficient career person. Right now she holds two positions, both of which are quite demanding of her time and talents. As UT Alumni Secretary, Joyce is involved in mobilizing alumni into fund-raising, recruitment and social activities, as well as keeping up with correspondence and records.

In addition, Mrs. Plumley is the Executive Secretary of Sword and Shield, UT's official Spartan football booster club. The organization has a membership of over 600, which Joyce hopes will increase significantly after the present membership drive. Joyce must enjoy her work, for she is also Secretary of the Halfback Club, the UT women's football booster organization.

In speaking of herself as a career woman, Joyce feels she has effectively combined the best of both professional and domestic worlds. "However," she adds, "society has a long way to go before women are treated equally — financially or as business associates."

...the student leaders

Ms. Marna Dillane

Dillane Ms. Nikkia M

If recognized achievements characterize leaders, then Marna Dillane is a leader. A speech and drama major from Waterbury, Connecticut, Marna has just completed her UT college career with a 3.8 GPA and the honor of being named Outstanding Woman Graduate.

Marna considers herself a serious scholar and is looking ahead to graduate school and a fulfilling profession. Unlike some women intellectuals, Marna does not consider herself a "libber," but she is aware of the problems unique to women, especially as they have come up in her own life.

"I've really had a harder time than male students," she admits, "because I've had to overachieve to prove that my intelligence and not my femininity made me academically successful... Many people in our society still view women as being brainless."

Marna also possesses the enviable attribute of a balanced personality. Her academic leadership is enhanced by other activities, from playing Lady Macbeth, to singing in a rock group, to winning beauty

As a black female, Nikkia Miller represents two minority groups. Although Nikkia does not feel she is a token minority citizen, like Marna she feels a need to overachieve to prove herself both as a woman and as a black American. Her attitude is one of healthy self-confidence: "I'm here because I made it on my own." Nikkia is particularly appreciative of how her University of Tampa experience has helped her to "learn to live with myself outside of the black community...and to get a feel for the whole highway of life."

A psychology major, Nikkia is looking ahead to a professional career as a child analyst — "to help children grow up with healthy minds."

"I've always been my own person," says Nikkla. To be sure. In addition to leadership positions in her dorm and in the Black Student Association, Nikkia writes poetry under the pen-name of Jamel Alexis Hampton, and is completing an autobiographical work, THE ROAD TOWARDS EXISTENCE.

Like almost all colleges across the country, UT is experiencing a rather sharp drop in applications and inquiries for the fall semester. The factors are many and complex; and the enrollment drop is occurring ironically at a time when UT has reached new levels of academic excellence.

Now more than ever is the appropriate time for friends and alumni of the University to help seek out students who are undecided, who need just that one phone call or personal contact to persuade them of the advantages offered by UT. Students today are disillusioned with the "multiversity," with second-rate faculty or programs. UT's particular strengths are its size, its new and innovative programs, its qualified and concerned faculty.

With limited time, funds and admissions personnel, UT can better meet the enrollment challenge if alumni and friends mobilize into action. Concerned persons may contact the Admissions Office or Dr. Michael Mendelsohn, V.P. for Academic Affairs.

Fifteen University of Tampa Counselors have embarked upon a new program designed to strengthen and assist the Admissions Office. James L. Ghiotto, Director of Public Affairs at TECO and former high school guidance counselor, heads the group of business leaders who will begin visiting Tampa high schools to talk with guidance counselors, students and parents about LIT

"Too often local students are not completely informed about the college right in their own back yard," Ghiotto told the Counselors. "The energy crisis and the tight money situation has prompted many of them to change their plans. By acting now we are in a position to offer bay area students and parents information about the University of Tampa on a personal basis. I know we will attract some good students from this program."

Aaron H. Dowd (center), president-elect of the UT National Alumni Association, congratulates UT's Outstanding Graduating Seniors, John Walsh and Marna Dillane. A leader in student government since his freshman days, and recent president of the Student Government Association, John graduated as a criminology major. Marna, a speech and drama student, also received the Delta Sigma Rho Forensic Award, and has been active in several campus organizations.

"the gay 90's"— a great theme for homecoming

Teddy Roosevelt, Henry Plant and other distinguished guests will revisit historic Plant Hotel during Homecoming Weekend. Students and alumni will relive those great days with horse-drawn carriages and a concert in the park.

Golf, tennis and special interest group parties will highlight Friday's activities. Saturday will begin with a special Leadership Breakfast followed by a Fashion Show for the ladies, an Alumni Barbeque before the game between the Spartans and the University of Southern Mississippi. Immediately following will be the traditional Victory Dance for students and alumni. Homecoming headquarters is the new Tampa Airport Resort Inn.

alumni news is important

Good records are the most important part of any alumni program. Many colleges employ a private clipping service to assist them with this job. With today's prices, the cost of this service is a prime consideration. UT alumni can help keep this cost down by clipping and forwarding information about alumni from local papers to the Alumni Office.
