

Editor's Introduction

In the third volume of Q, The University of Tampa's students and faculty have come together to present a variety of our students' scholarly work produced in inquiry-based courses. Here at the University, the Office of Undergraduate Research and Inquiry (OURI) offers courses that give students the opportunity to explore and examine different disciplines, as well as form and discuss their interpretations of their findings. In Q, we present a select number of these written examinations. The subject matter in Q ranges from ad campaigns to scientific research manuscripts to art analyses, and more.

In this volume of Q, each essay was produced in a designated inquiry-based course. Upon completion, professors had the opportunity to nominate their students' papers to appear in Q. After OURI Director Dr. Eric Freundt, advisor Dr. David Reamer, and Editor in Chief Maggie Sperry, reviewed and considered each nomination, seven essays were selected to appear in this volume of Q. A team of student editors then worked with Dr. David Reamer and Maggie Sperry in spring 2022's WRI 376 Advanced Publication Practicum class to edit and digitally lay out each essay.

We are proud to present the third volume of Q to you with its diverse subject matter and well-written scholarly work. Q offers a chance for students to experience the scholarly research and publication process as well as work with one another and different faculty members. We hope you enjoy the exemplary work students have produced in their inquiry-based courses and which the student editors have worked hard to present to you here.
